'Who' fans sold short?

Firstly, allow me to congratulate the entire Doctor Who team for producing another superb series (Tuesdays and Wednesdays BBC1), in particular Peter Grimwade for coming up with, in my opinion, the best story ever to grace the programme, the recent Mawdryn Undead (1-9 February). The return of the Brigadier was a master stroke, the flashback sequences were stunning and Mark Strickson as Turlough promises to be the best male companion since Jamie; in plain terms, a classic.

However, I was disgusted to hear that Eric Saward's closing story of the series has been cancelled owing to an industrial dispute, and that the penultimate story is also in jeopardy. If this goes ahead, I hope that the producer will endeavour to return the show well before January, or make next season extra long.

I look forward to the 20th anniversary programme.

Where was Who?

A question for the Doctor Who team. In Mawdryn Undead, Tegan and Nyssa are with Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart, complete with Tardis, in 1977, while the Doctor is with the Brigadier in 1983, minus Tardis. I understand why, but where was the Doctor in 1977?

Ian J. Scott-Horne

JOHN NATHAN-TURNER, Producer, 'Doctor Who', replies:

Eric Saward's story will be included in the next season of Doctor Who; the penultimate story is not in jeopardy after all. The 20th anniversary programme, by the way, a 90-minute 'special' entitled The Five Doctors, will be shown towards the end of the year.

In reply to Ian Scott-Horne's question, Tegan and Nyssa were with Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart in 1977 while the Doctor, via the Transmat capsule, was also with the Brigadier in 1983. Hence the Doctor's attempt to retrieve the Tardis from 1977.
